Getting registered with the GMC
You must make sure you have provisional registration before you start F1.

We’ve visited your medical school to check your identity. However, this is just the first step in the process of getting registered. Follow this simple guide to make sure you have your provisional registration before you start work.

What you need to know now

Keep your personal details up to date
You can update your contact details using your GMC Online account. If you wish to change your name you should tell your medical school, which will let us know about it.

Find out when you start work
Find out if your employer or foundation school needs you to be provisionally registered for induction periods. We will ask you for your start date when you apply.

Read about the declaration of fitness to practise
You will need to declare all potential fitness to practise issues when you apply. You must read our guidance on the issues you have to declare and how we deal with them. You can find the guidance at www.gmc-uk.org/ftpdec.
Applying on GMC Online

In April we will email you instructions on how to apply for provisional registration using GMC Online. You’ll need to:

- confirm your start date
- complete a declaration of fitness to practise
- pay a £90 application fee.

You should do this as early as possible, especially if you have a fitness to practise issue to declare.

You don’t need to tell us when you graduate. Your medical school will do this.

Before you start work

You must make sure that you are registered. When we grant your registration, we will email you and post you a registration certificate. You can also check our online medical register at www.gmc-uk.org/LRMP. Your provisional registration status will show from the date your registration starts.
